The Zen Master

There was a Zen master. He had a small band of followers who looked to him for guidance. One of them had a small son. This son wanted a horse very badly. So, after some time the parents were able to get the money together, and they got him a horse.

His friends said, “That’s good!” But the Zen master said, “We’ll see.”

Some years later, when he was fifteen years old, the young man was riding his horse. As he was riding, he fell off and broke his leg. It mended poorly so that he always walked with a limp.

His friends said, “That’s bad.” The Zen master said, “We’ll see.”

Then war broke out. Anybody who was eligible to be drafted was drafted. Young men from the neighborhood all had to go, except for this young man who had injured himself during the fall from his horse.

So when the neighbors and friends heard that the young man was exempt because of his leg, they said, “That’s wonderful!” The Zen master said, “We’ll see.”
